

The Daily Courant.

Thursday, June 10. 1703

From the Harlem Courant, dated June 12.

Vienna, May 30.

THIS Court has sent Presents of a considerable Value to Monsieur Coehorn, and other General Officers that assisted in the Siege of Bonn, for their Dispatch in taking that Place. 'Tis said there is some great Design on the Anvil, and that the King of the Romans will certainly take the Field and see it executed. From Passau they write, that Cardinal Lamberg arriv'd there from Ratisbon on the 25th, and was welcom'd with a tripple Discharge of the Cannon on the Walls. On the 25th all Commerce and Correspondence with the King of France, the Duke of Anjou, the Elector of Bavaria, and their Adherents and Abettors, was prohibited here on severe Penalties, by publick Sound of Trumpet.

From the Amsterdam Courant, dated June 9.

Ratisbon, May 31. The Diet has not assembled since Whitsontide. There is no further Talk at present of the Departure of the Deputies from hence, nor of removing the Diet to another Place. Mean time the Declaration made on the 22d of April in the Emperor's Name by his chief Commissioner, That what has been acted by the Diet since the Elector of Bavaria's Troops have had Possession of one of the Gates of this City is null and invalid, is ill resented by some Courts, who have sent Instructions to their Deputies, to take a fit time to make a Protestation, that such a Proceeding shall not be made a President hereafter for restraining the Liberty and Power of the Diet. The Duke of Brunswick Cell has written to his Minister, that whereas it appears by Letters from Vienna and elsewhere, that some ill minded Persons would insinuate that His Highness intends to share the Principality of Hildesheim with the Dukes of Brunswick Hanover, and Wolfembüttel, he the said Minister shall take occasion to undeceive those who may too easily incline to give credit to that Calumny, by representing that His Highness has no such Thoughts, his Sole aim in putting some of his Troops into Hildesheim, being to maintain Peace in the Lower Saxony and particularly in Hildesheim; that the Commotions rais'd in that City by the different Factions are not yet quieted, but 'tis hop'd will be shortly; and that then His Highness will give an unquestionable Proof of the Uprightness of his Intentions. Count Massei who commanded the Bavarians in the late Action at Crottensee, sent a Relation of it (which is printed here) to the Bavarian General the Count d'Arco, in which he endeavours to clear himself from the Imputation of ill Conduct on that Occasion, by charging the Inferior Officers with neglect of Duty, in particular he acquaints the said General, That the Orders he gave were not executed; That some Battallions which were posted advantageously, quitted their Ground on the Approach of the Enemy, and drew out upon a Plain, where for want of Horse to cover them, after a brave Resistance, they were broken and routed: That the Officers and others belonging to the Train, took the Horses out of the Carriages and rid away with them, so that he could make no use of his Field Pieces: That he charg'd the Enemies at the Head of 200 Dragoons, but his Horse was kill'd, and drop'd so unluckily, that for a considerable time he could not get from under him, and had not a certain Lieutenant help'd to disengage him, there he must have lain. Lastly, That a Captain who was posted in Crottensee, with 120 Men to defend it, abandon'd it without Necessity or Order, (tho' now he pretends he had Order,) so that the Franconians enter'd it without Opposition, and took all the Baggage. Whereupon he thought it advisable to retire to Amberg, lest the Enemy should make further use of their Victory, and possess themselves of that Place.
